

5.2 Determine the type of licence to apply for;

Applicants should be familiar with the classes and subclasses of licences to determine which class their activities of interest fall under.

Requirements differ based on the licence class or subclass. Appendix B: Cannabis Classes and Subclasses of Licences should be referred to for details on each class and subclass, and Figure 2 can be used as a general reference.

Figure 2: Cannabis classes and subclasses of licences

An industrial hemp licence and a cannabis licence are two other types of licences, but are outside the scope of this guide.

<https://www.canada.ca/en/health-canada/services/drugs-medication/cannabis/industry-licensees-applicants/licensing-summary/guide.html#5>

Figure 2 - Text Description

- If I want to grow cannabis on a large scale, the licence I need to apply for is a standard cultivation licence. This allows me to produce dried, fresh, plants and seeds.
- If I want to grow cannabis on a small scale (less than 200 square metres), the licence I need to apply for is a micro-cultivation licence. This allows me to produce dried, fresh, plants and seeds.
- If I want to grow cannabis for starting material (that is, plants and seeds), the licence I need to apply for is a nursery licence. This allows me to produce plants, and seeds in an area that is less than 50 square metres.
- If I want to make cannabis products on a large scale, the licence I need to apply for is a standard processing licence. This allows me to manufacture cannabis products.
- If I want to make cannabis products on a small scale (that is, using less than the equivalent of 600 kilograms of dried cannabis in a calendar year), the licence I need to apply for is a micro-processing licence. This allows me to manufacture cannabis products.
- If I want to sell cannabis for medical purposes, the licence I need to apply for is a sale for medical purposes licence. This allows me to sell cannabis to registered clients.
- If I want to do testing of cannabis, the licence I need to apply for is an analytical testing licence. This allows me to do any third party testing.
- If I want to do research with cannabis, the licence I need to apply for is a research licence. This allows me to do research and development with cannabis.
- An industrial hemp licence and cannabis drug licence are two other types of licences, but are outside the scope of this guide.